I have a dream

I have a dream, that one day humankind will stop destroying our Godlike planet and stop harming the precious, exquisite animals by hurling rubbish on to our planet like it is a global bin.

That, the dolphins and sea animals would be able to take more enhanced, deeper breaths and have a sense of freedom if there were no damaging plastics in the sea.

That, the poor animals of the forest would have a home and they would have somewhere to live instead of dying in the cold of the night.

That, all of the aged and anxious elderly would get to have a social life and interact with the next generation of people and would feel deep comfort and a sense of belonging.

That, our soldiers would not have to be as brave as lions and be in constant fear of their lives but instead be at peace with the human race.

That, the people who had once slept on the cold, damp floor of the streets would now sleep on a soft havan comforted by a warm fleece blanket in peace.

These are my hopes and dreams for a more brighter and prosperous future for all human kind.