I have a dream

I have a dream that a healing cloud of peace will rise above us all, transforming enemies into friends all over the world
That angry bombs of hate are replaced by explosions of love
And zones of fear and persecution become places of safety and calm where everyone feels loved and protected.

I have a dream that the world will no longer suffocate under the clouds of fog and fumes but be able to breathe freely once more
That all animal habitats are pollution-free protection where nature can grow
And our treasured seas will be a place where turtles can swim without the threat of being shackled by asphyxiating tentacles of plastic

I have a dream that no child will be taunted by the cruel hands of hunger and that starvation and malnutrition become a long-forgotten nightmare
That all thirst will be quenched by refreshing, untainted water
And children safely slumber soundly in soft, comfortable beds

I have a dream that all people are treated equally and the dark shadow of prejudice is destroyed by the shining light of fairness
That people will be judged by their actions and words not their looks
And nobody is treated differently just because of the colour of their skin

I have a dream that all children will be embraced by the encouraging arms of education so that everyone can achieve their dreams and desires
That all skills and talents can be nurtured,
And no overpowering obstacles will block their path as they stride along the road of life, growing like trees reaching to the stars up above

These are my hopes
These are my dreams
This is my wish for the world
